President

The ingredients of a championship ball club are not secret: a strong infield and outfield, steady pitching, smart catching, a dependable bench. But there is another vital factor — YOU. Your support can make the difference between good baseball and inspired baseball. In stating this fact, we humbly acknowledge our debt to you — to every Phillies fan everywhere — and thank you sincerely.

MANAGER

1943 he joined the Phillies' organization and was assigned to pilot Utica. On July 26, 1948, he took over the reins of the Phillies.

Among the players he'd meanwhile developed were Richie Ashburn, Granville Hamner, Bubba Church, Puddin'head Jones, Jocko Thompson, Jack Mayo, Stan Lopata and Leo Cristante. As he had done for the Yankees, he proved himself not only a keen strategist, but as talented a judge and instructor of young material as the game knows.

Eddie graduated from Ithaca College, Ithaca, N. Y., in 1935, where he played football, as well as baseball. From 1937 until the spring of 1943 he taught there in the Science Department between baseball seasons, for two years served as assistant director of athletics.

Signed last October to a new three-year contract extending through 1954, this popular field leader is working under the longest agreement for a Phillies' manager in many years. Developer of the famous Whiz Kids, Sawyer has the background of a full-fledged college professor, a teaching career often played up for its human interest value.

Notwithstanding this gentle past, Eddie has always been demanding in discipline; his ball clubs noted for their drive and gruff pugnacity. In 1950 he led the Phillies to their first championship in 35 years. This in but his second full season at the helm.

Sawyer started in professional ball in 1934 as an outfield prospect with the Yankee-owned Norfolk team, of the Piedmont League. He was signed the year previously while playing for Malone, N. Y., in the same independent summer resort league (the Northern) that later was to produce Robin Roberts.

In 1939 he branched out as playing manager with Amsterdam, N. Y., of the Canadian-American League. All told, he had put in five years as manager in the Yankee chain when in the winter of

... and COACHES

Fortunate are the Phillies to have four such coaches as the men pictured here. They combine, as Eddie Sawyer is given to observe, just about all the qualities the manager of a big league team can ask of those who compose his staff.

All have a wealth of knowledge of the intricacies of the game; of how to play the percentage, when to take a studied risk. Benny Bengough, Cy Perkins and Dusty Cooke, with little Maje McDonnell chipping in, give the Phillies' manager a staff of assistants unexcelled in the majors.

The late revered Herbert J. Pennock built this corps and it reflects his judgment. Cy Perkins wore the catcher's armor for 14 years in the big time, before that put in four as a minor leaguer coming up.

Bengough, whose larkish grin on the coaching line hides a shameful amount of guile, put in 10 years behind the big league bat. Cooke starred in the outfield in his playing days. The three represent 58 years of active play.

Perkins, Bengough and Cooke entered the Phillies' family in 1946. Signed on as a trainer upon his discharge from the Navy as pharmacist's mate, Cooke was appointed coach two years later. Maje McDonnell, the "infant" of the staff, came along as batting practise pitcher in 1947.

A Philadelphian and alumnus of Northeast high school and Villanova, he earned his letters in baseball and basketball, still coaches the Villanova freshmen court squad when not occupied on the diamond. Maje carried a rifle for Uncle Sam for three years.

FARM SYSTEM

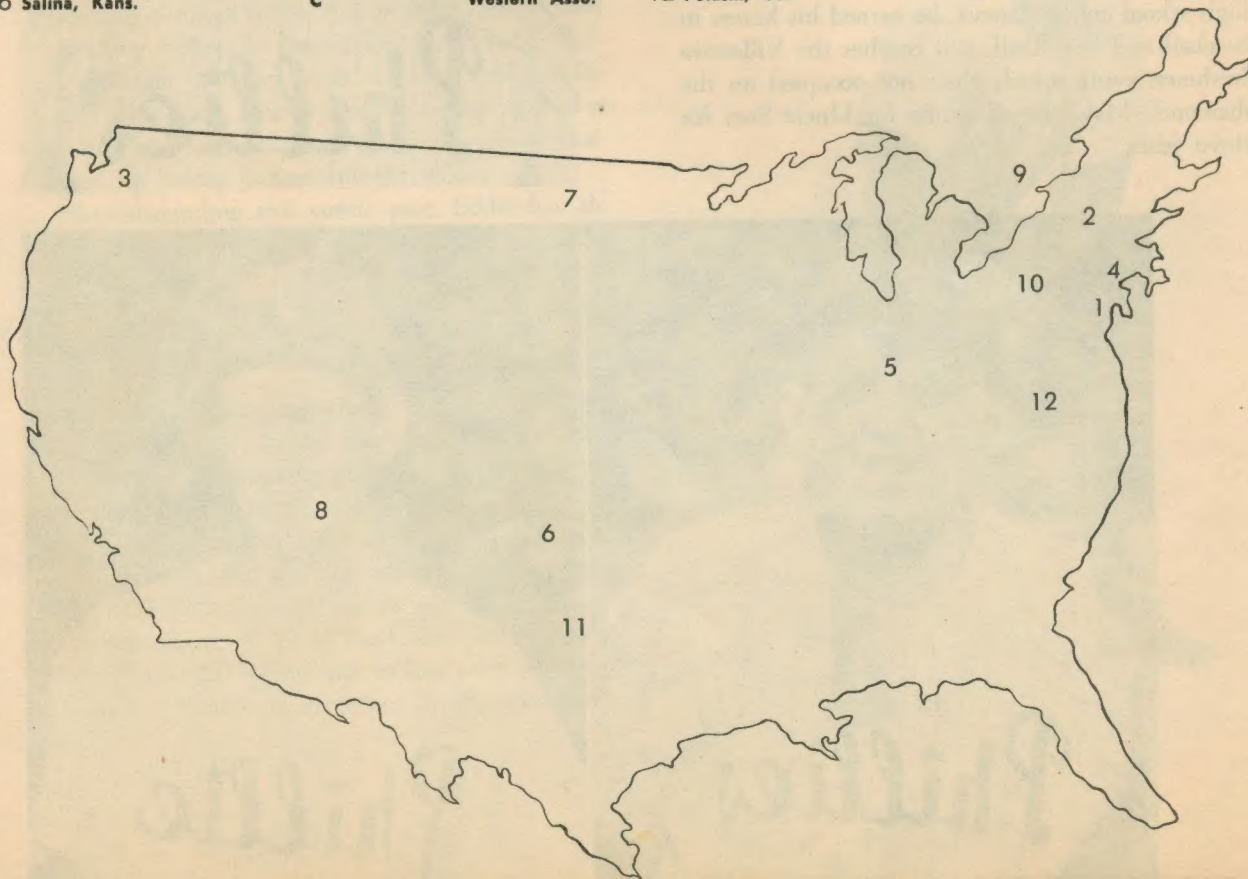

JOSEPH F. REARDON
Minor League Director

The rapid success of the Phillies farm system is one that highlights this latter day method of building pennant winners. Within six years of instituting one that was more than one in name only, the club had progressed spectacularly from second division to a World Series contender.

The Phillies were in that 1950 series solely because their chain of preparatory teams had produced Robin Roberts, Bubba Church, Bob Miller and Jim Konstanty, four pitchers who between them won 55 games; had delivered Granville Hamner and Willie Jones for the infield; Richie Ashburn and Del Ennis for the outfield.

When the present owner took over, the Phillies had but two farm teams—Wilmington and Bradford. These were quickly added to so that for several years now there have seldom been less than a dozen such affiliated clubs.

The list now reads: The Baltimore Orioles in the Triple A International League; Schenectady, N. Y., and Kennewick, Wash., in the Class A Eastern and Western International Leagues, respectively; Wilmington and Terre Haute in Class B's Inter-State and Three Eye. In Class C: Salina, in the Western Association; Grand Forks, N. D., in the Northern; Salt Lake City in the Pioneer; Granby, Ont., in the Provincial. In Class D: Bradford, in the Pony League; Miami, Okla., in the K.O.M.; Pulaski, Va., in the Appalachian.

Executives of this widely spread layout that extends from one end of the country to the other are Joe Reardon, director in charge; his assistant, Eddie Collins, Jr.; and Johnny Nee, director of player personnel. These are the men who have made the Phillies' farm system the best in the game.

Approximately 300 players are scattered through the dozen teams. Among them are a great number who in a year or two will be battling today's star regulars for a spot in the line-up, their place in the headlines.

To name a typical few, all new to professional baseball last year, there are Pitchers Tom Casa-grande and Bob Greenwood; Outfielder Bill Newman; Second baseman Ted Kazanski. Then, of course, there are several prized youngsters who were in spring training with the parent team this year and are sure to return.

Left-hander Tom Casagrande, a $40,000 bonus player from Fordham, hurled 17 victories for Wilmington last year, winning his last 11 in a row. He pitched two no-hit games, a one-hit game; on one occasion won two games in one night, the second as a relief pitcher.

Greenwood, a 6 foot 4 right-hander with a snapping fast ball, won 21 games for Salt Lake City, held the opposition to 3:30 earned runs per nine innings. Outfielder Bill Newman, out of Scranton, Pa., University, hit .355 for Bradford. Reardon calls Newman, a left-hand hitter, right-hand thrower, as fine a kid prospect as he ever came across.

Ted Kazanski, landed as a 17-year-old high school graduate last June for a bonus outlay of $80,000, played with Terre Haute. Six foot, two in height, he was sought by every other major league team when President Bob Carpenter flew to Detroit and signed him personally. Ted is certainly not more than two or three years away.

It can be ventured that by that time, the Phillies will be manned almost entirely by players they developed themselves in the Reardon, Collins, Nee and Co., farm system.

RICHIE ASHBURN

Crack outfielder whose implausible catches win plaudits even from rival players. Hit .344 in 1951, for the second time in his four years in the majors finished second for the batting title. In one streak went on a rampage that racked up 29 hits in 56 times at bat for an average of .518; later hit in 20 straight games. He wound up leading the league in hits and in singles (181); was voted Philadelphia's Most Valuable Player. In the All-Star game he singled twice in four tries to bring his record for two Dream Games to 4 hits in 8 at bats.

TOMMY BROWN

Purchased from Brooklyn last June, promptly demonstrated his home run talents for the Phillies at Pittsburgh on June 21 when he hit one for a grand slam in the first inning. Against St. Louis in Shibe Park on July 16, tripled with the bags filled and two out, changing a 2-0 defeat into an ultimate 5-2 victory. A major leaguer at the age of 16 in 1944, promises to become the youngest 10-year man in recent National League history.

FORREST BURGESS

Young and lively catcher landed in last winter's deal with Cincinnati, did all his 1951 catching for the Chicago Cubs. Latter traded him to Cincinnati in October. A Cub chattel in the minors, led the Double A Southern League with Nashville in 1948 with imposing batting average of .386, hit 22 home runs and drove in 102 runs. Nicknamed Smokey, spent the seasons of 1945 and '46 in the Army.

Putsy Caballero

PUTSY CABALLERO

Used largely as a pinch-runner last year, this nimble Louisianan entered the majors with the Phils in 1944 as a 16-year-old high school graduate. With Utica in 1945, was named as the third-baseman on the Eastern League's All-Star team. Played with Terre Haute in 1946; and back with Utica in 1947 was named as the second-baseman on the Eastern League's All-Star club. Characteristically, says his biggest baseball thrill is "being a Phillie."

Bubba Church

BUBBA CHURCH

Another 20-game winner in the making for the Phillies' superb mound corps. Now in his third season, turned in 15 wins in 1951. Along the route, hurled 27-1/3 consecutive scoreless innings; came within one hit of reaching the pitchers' Hall of Fame in the first game of a double-header in Pittsburgh on August 5. Lone hit he surrendered was to Ralph Kiner, who with two out in the seventh inning managed to lift a low curve ball over the left-field barrier into nearby "Greenberg Gardens."

MEL CLARK

A talented youth at the batting dish and considered just about ripe for major league duty, made his first appearance in the Phillies' outfield last September 11 in Pittsburgh. Singled twice in four times up, following day in the lair of the Pirates made three hits in five tries, including his first major league home run. Signed by Scout Eddie Krajnik in 1947 while attending Ohio University, where he starred in baseball and basketball.

CON DEMPSEY

Pitcher drafted from the San Francisco Seals despite knowledge that he had arm trouble. Member of the University of San Francisco nine for four years, graduated with an A.B. degree and signed by the Seals in 1947 was farmed to Salt Lake City. With Seals in '48, celebrated his first season in Triple A by winning 16, leading the league in earned-run averages with 2.10; in strike-outs with 171. Karl Drews

KARL DREWS

Hardly a rookie, but a newcomer as far as the Phillies are concerned. Winner of 17 games for Baltimore in 1951 and leading International League pitcher in complete games, 21, joined the Phillies late in the season. It might be said he deprived the Brooklyn Dodgers of the pennant when on the night of September 22 in Ebbets Field he bested Don Newcombe, beating the Dodgers by a score of 7-3, fanning six and allowing but eight hits.

Del Ennis

DEL ENNIS

Handicapped by strained muscles of the back and shoulders, along with other ills, Kid Slug was unable in 1951 to duplicate his great season of the year before. In 1950, providing the big punch in the march to the pennant, led the league in runs batted in with 126. Hit .311, laced 34 doubles, 8 triples and 31 home runs. Born in Philadelphia, a graduate of Olney high school, had 130 major league home runs to his credit at the end of last season; 558 RBI's. Was a schoolboy discovery of Scout Jocko Collins.

Howard Fox

HOWIE FOX

Star right-hand hurler acquired along with Connie Ryan and Forrest Burgess in the big winter swap that sent Andy Seminick, Dick Sisler, Eddie Pellagrini and Niles Jordan to the Cincinnati Reds. Hit the majors with Cincinnati in 1944 and became one of the league's best pitchers in latter half of 1950. Won 10 of last 12 decisions that year, last six in a row. A former student at Oregon University, broke into organized baseball in 1943 with the Birmingham Barons.

GRANVILLE HAMNER

Mr. Shortstop didn't permit aching limbs he had to contend with all season stop him from making 1951 another of his great years. He still remained a crackjack defensive star, the best middle man in baseball on the relay from the outfield, but had to yield his consecutive game record. Forced to sit one out in Chicago on September 19, ended his string of playing 477 games in a row, an endurance try extending back to the last 17 games of 1948. Notable feature of his 1951 season was his record of not going hitless more than two games in succession until mid-August.

ANDY HANSEN

Seasoned right-hander brought in from the Baltimore Orioles in mid-season last year. Quickly made a niche for himself with a number of swell rescue jobs. Appearing in 24 games and pitching a total of 39 innings, limited the enemy to a sparse 2.54 earned runs per nine stanzas. A pitcher with fine control, walked but seven men. Handy Andy launched his professional career in the Giants' farm system in 1943.

Ken Heintzelman

KEN HEINTZELMAN

Wise, canny veteran of the pitching hill, had little luck as a starter last year, but developed into an excellent relief man. Gave one of his finest exhibitions of relief work in the memorable 1-0, 15-inning night game of a two-night double-header with Boston in Shibe Park on August 7. Entering the box in the 11th inning after Russ Meyer had blanked the Braves over the first ten stanzas, held the visitors to three hits in the last five innings, fanned three and didn't walk a man.

STAN HOLLMIG

Husky outfielder back for another trial after spending 1951 with the Baltimore Orioles and Atlanta Crackers. Played most of the season with the latter, for whom his hitting attracted the attention of every big league scout visiting the Southern Association. Was a Texas A & M baseball, football and basketball ace when signed as a costly bonus player in the spring of 1948. As a college athlete, twice led the Southwest Conference in home runs.

RICHARD YOUNG

Broke in as an outfielder at Klamath Falls in 1948, switched to third-base while dividing the following summer with Terre Haute and Bradford. Played the same position for the Wilmington Blue Rocks in '50, tying for the league lead in triples with 15. Moving over to second-base with Schenectady last year, led the Eastern League in hits with 166 and along with team-mate Mel Clark reported to the Phillies in September.

NIPPY JONES

First-baseman who though drafted from Rochester, spent most of 1951 with the Cardinals. Added as infield insurance, started out alternating at second-base and third in the minor leagues, also played some in the outfield. Was switched to first-base by the Cards in 1948, in the following season hit an even .300 in 110 games. Was disabled most of 1950 because of an operation on his back.

Iron-winged veteran who wrote a new page in the exciting story of modern pitching when two years back, including the Dream Game and world series, he pitched in 78 games — more than half the number of games a big league club normally plays in a season! Gained the Most Valuable Player award, was also voted America's Male Athlete of the year in a nationwide poll. Is a scholarly four-letter graduate of Syracuse University.

Jack Lohrke

JACK LOHRKE

Utility infielder secured from the Giants last December. Known around baseball as "Lucky" Lohrke, entitlement that resulted from his missing an Army transport which crashed; and on another occasion debarking en route from a bus belonging to the Spokane, Western International League team, hours later involved in a collision (June 24, 1946) that cost the lives of nine players. Entered the National League in 1947 as a graduate of the San Diego club.

Returns for another try at big league catching after being optioned last year to Baltimore. An injured knee put him on the Orioles' list of the maimed most of the season. A massive youngster, was signed off the Detroit sandlots in mid-summer of 1946, much to the chagrin of the Detroit Tigers. Assigned to Terre Haute, moved up to Utica in 1947 and was voted the Eastern League's Most Valuable Player.

John L. Mayo

JACK MAYO

Fleet-footed outfielder up for another trial after spending 1951 with the Baltimore Orioles. An A.B. grad of Notre Dame, where he shone in baseball and on the track, spent a year with the Marine Corps. First minor league experience was with Vandergrift, of the Middle Atlantic League, in 1947; in 1948 was called in by the Phils from Utica. Incapacitated most of 1949, came back in 1950 to hit .294 for Toronto and again return to the parent club.

RUSS MEYER

Rarely missing a year in which he isn't injured, the same old jinx befell this slender curvist last August 12. Spiked in a collision at first-base in the opening game of a double-header in the Polo Grounds, a wound that required nine stitches, was out for the balance of the season. A Chicago Cub when he came into the league six years ago, was purchased from the Bruins on the eve of the 1948 world series. Promptly in 1949 became leading right-hand pitcher of the league on earned run averages, 3.08.

BOB MILLER

Returned for another shot, but is no stranger, since he spent all of 1950 with the Phils and contributed 11 victories towards the winning of the pennant. Remindful of Dizzy Dean both in looks and pitching style, won eight games before encountering his first major league defeat. Bothered by sore arm almost from the outset of last season. A native of Detroit, where he attended Detroit U.; spent 26 months in the infantry, including a month of combat in Luzon.

BILL NICHOLSON

One of the great hitters of our times, a fine thrower and outfielder, a powerhouse at bat. Used mostly as a pinch-hitter and reservist last year, was responsible for 30 RBI's in a comparatively few times at bat. Of his 41 hits made no less than 19 of them good for extra bases. The name of Nicholson is scattered through the records under all manner of long distance hitting items. Left-hand batter who throws right, got his nickname of Swish from the lashing cut he takes at the ball.

Stephen Ridzik

STEPHEN RIDZIK

Youngster who in his first spring training season with the club in 1950 broke a kneecap and was flown to Philadelphia for several weeks of hospitalization. Noted for his pitching speed, set out on minor league trail in 1945. Following recovery from his training camp mishap two years ago, joined Toronto. Was recalled a month before the season was over and carried around the circuit so that treatment of his knee could be supervised by Trainer Frank Wiechec.

ROBIN ROBERTS

Thoroughly established as the best right-hand pitcher in the club's history since Hall of Fame's Grover Cleveland Alexander, reached the 20-win mark for the second year in a row in 1951. Pitched 22 complete games and won all but one, needing no pitching help in any of his triumphs. Among his victories were a two hit game, a three-hitter and two four-hitters. Pitched six shutouts, two in succession; led the league as a starting pitcher with 39 assignments, pitched the most innings, 315.

CONNIE RYAN

Scrappy, clever fielder acquired from Cincinnati this past winter, fills the club's search for an accomplished second-baseman. An Irishman from New Orleans, a long distance hitter who walloped 16 home runs for the Reds in '51, is a player cast in the same mould as Granny Hamner, Eddie Stanky, other noted devotees of give and take around the battle ground of second-base; had a widely publicized tangle last year in Cincinnati with equally willing Puddin'head Jones.

KEN SILVESTRI

One of the shrewdest of the unsung men who handle and coach big league pitchers, this huge factotum of the bullpen has been of immense value in the development of the Whiz Kid members of the hurling staff. To him goes a large share of the credit for the success, among others, of Curt Simmons and Bubba Church. A catcher, Ken set out in professional baseball 16 years ago after playing sandlot ball in Chicago.

Curt Simmons

CURT SIMMONS

First major leaguer to be called up when the 28th Division (National Guard of Pennsylvania) was activated for Federal service in July of 1950, missed all of last season. A great blow to the Phillies' chances of repeating as pennant winners, the youthful southpaw had turned in 17 victories against 8 defeats for a percentage of .680 before he left the club in 1950, at season's end the highest average registered by a left-hand pitcher who had worked as many as 10 complete games.

JOCKO THOMPSON

World War II's most decorated paratrooper and at its finish Captain and Aide to General James M. Gavin in the occupation of Berlin. A southpaw flinger, beat the Giants on his first starting assignment in '51, limiting the Polo Grounders to six hits and himself scoring the winning run after hitting a two-bagger. On his next assignment, held the Braves to two hits in Boston, but lost a heart-breaker by a score of 1-0.

Edward Waitkus

EDDIE WAITKUS

First-sacker unsurpassed as a fielder, remarkably clever in digging low throws out of the dirt. Underweight most of last year, did not have one of his best years at bat but was still no hitter the pitchers enjoyed facing. In the flag-winning year of 1950, playing on sheer grit by the time the race was nearing its end, hit .284, led the league in singles with 143. Was acquired by the Phillies in a trade with the Cubs, December 1948. Married last November 17 to Carol Webel, of Albany, N. Y.

DEL WILBER

Broke in as a Phil maskman in 1951 and proved an able hand at the batting dish. Painfully injured May 10 in a collision with Wally Westlake, was cut under the right eye by one of the then Pirate's spikes, an angry gash that required several stitches. Was back in action three days later. August 27, vs Cincinnati in Shibe Park, hit three consecutive home runs, one sailing completely over the left-field stands.

HISTORY OF

Etched in the memory of generations are the faces, the figures, the personalities of scores of players who wearing the uniform of the Phillies won a lasting spot in their affections. Legendary names of baseball's glowing background are woven through the history of the club like a fine thread of gold untarnished by time. Names that still ring clearly down the years.

Star-spangled names like . . . Ed Delahanty . . . Billy Hamilton . . . Charley Ferguson . . . Larry Lajoie . . . Sid Farrar . . . Jack Clements . . . Kid Gleason. All giants of the '80's and '90's and the early 1900's.

And names like "Harvard Eddie" Grant . . . Sherry Magee . . . Hans Lobert . . . Otto Knabe . . . Charlie Dooen . . . John Titus . . . Mike Doolan . . . Grover Cleveland Alexander . . . Bill Killifer . . . Davey Bancroft . . . Gabby Cravath . . . Dode Paskert . . . Eppa Rixey . . . Fred Luderus—the last seven backbone of the team that won the 1915 pennant.

BILL KILLIFER

The first game ever played in the National League was one played between Philadelphia and Boston, at 25th and Jefferson Streets, Philadelphia, on Saturday, April 22, 1876. Small heed was given the momentous occasion by the local papers and periodicals.

A few lines buried in fine print near the shipping news was the scant attention awarded it. They read, in part: "On Saturday afternoon about 3,000 persons assembled upon the grounds at 25th and Jefferson Streets to witness the first championship game of baseball between the Boston and Athletic clubs.

"Both clubs had their full strength, and a close and exciting game was expected. It turned out to be so. The Athletics should have won the game but their fielding was poor."

As if waking late, the press gave considerably more space to the second game of the "Boston and Athletic Clubs" series. Played on Monday, April 24, the report was headlined simply "Baseball," but in this case included a box score and the name of the umpire. Likewise the news that the home team batted first this time, won by a score of 20 to 3.

(It will be news to many that the Phillies then didn't have the title that is their trademark, were called the Athletics. The name that has since distinguished them was adopted when in 1883, Alfred J. Reach purchased the Worcester, Mass. franchise and brought it to Philadelphia.)

The year of 1876 was hardly kind to the Philadelphia entry in the National League. The city of row houses and cobbled streets was more stirred by the Centennial Exhibition; the excited announcements in the papers of the opening of "Wanamaker's Grand Depot."

Things were tough all around for the team and its owner, G. W. Thompson. The New Haven club twice failed to show up for games. On Friday, July 21, the Athletics lost to Hartford, 6-1, and the press let out a blast.

Added to the hazards was a marked leanness of the exchequer. Beset by financial troubles from the very beginning. Toward the end of the season there were insufficient funds to allow the team to complete the schedule. Forthwith, the Athletics were suspended from the league.

THE PHILLIES

No Philadelphia club appeared again in the league until 1883, when the direct succession was started that was to lead eventually to the Phillies of today. To President R. R. M. Carpenter, Jr., Manager Eddie Sawyer and the nation's new baseball pets—The Whiz Kids.

Most historians dismiss the team of 1876 as never having happened. Probably on the score of its spending only a fraction of a season in the league, the happenstance of the name "Athletics," and the lapse of seven years that was to take place before Philadelphia came into the league to stay.

For these, the first game the Phillies played took place May 1, 1883, at Recreation Park, 24th Street and Ridge Avenue, a short distance away from the field they occupied seven years previously.

No one, including the new management, headed by Alfred J. Reach, made much fuss about this opening game. There was no band, no flag raising, no mayor on hand to throw out the first ball. Perhaps it was all old hat to the fans, for many had seen the team do its spring training—at home.

However, this game started the long line of brilliant and colorful players who have fought the Phillies' cause. One of the first stars of magnitude in the firmament was Charley Ferguson, who pitched for them in the '80's. Charley earned his place in fandom's heart in 1886 by becoming the first pitcher in baseball history to win two games in one day. Two years before, Ferguson became one of the early no-hit pitchers, a trick he turned against Providence in winning 1-0.

The years rolled along, bringing fresh honors to the Philadelphia club, new idols who came to linger, add their names to those of their illustrious predecessors and pass along. Billy Hamilton, outfielder, gave the Phillies their first batting champion when in 1891 he hit .338. Eight years later, the impetuous Ed Delahanty moved into the scene with the most dangerous bat of the period and led the league with a mark of .408.

Meanwhile, the Phils had presented for the edification and perhaps consternation of the fans, a left-hand catcher! He was John T. (Jack) Clements, one of the very few southpaw backstops to make the big league grade.

All this time and for a good many long years to follow, it appears that the only members of the Phillies who worried greatly were the unsung men who came into ownership of the franchise and those they selected to lead the team on the field. Previous to Bob Carpenter's accession late in 1943, eleven owners gave it a whirl and were spun off; prior to Eddie Sawyer, 25 different managers.

Whatever their cares, it has never been said of any of the harrassed people moving in and out of the owner's office, the managerial seat, that they complained of lacking individual star performers. There was never a lack of these. The lack was, on the one hand, a bankroll; on the other hand, supporting strength for the individual stars.

Likely, the only star they bemoaned was Napoleon (Larry) Lajoie; and he not for baseball reasons, but for the fact that the slugging Frenchman saw fit to jump the club when the American League was formed. A named always mentioned with the game's greatest hitters and second-basemen, that of Lajoie's was added to the Phillies in 1896.

By now, the team had left the rather unkempt playing field known as Recreation Park; had, in 1887, moved into a "magnificent park" built at Broad and Huntingdon Streets. It was proudly boasted this park contained the first cantilever stands in baseball, a most advanced departure in ball park construction. This contained the diamond on which was gathered the team that was to win the 1915 championship.

In the assembling of the team, First-baseman Fred Luderus joined the club in 1910; Grover Cleveland Alexander and Outfielder Dode Paskert in 1911. The next year witnessed the arrival of Pitcher Eppa Rixey and Outfielder Gabby Cravath. In the winter following the 1914 season, Pat Moran was appointed manager. One of his first steps was to purchase Davey Bancroft from the Portland, Pacific Coast League club to fill the gap at short. Trades, notably one that sent Sherry Magee to Boston, filled out the line-up. Sunk in sixth place the year before, the Phillies were on their way to the pennant.

Alexander won 31 games for the Moran-led flag-chasers; Gabby Cravath, slugging forerunner of the modern home run kings to come, whacked 24 home runs, the high since the turn of the century. Fittingly enough, he and Alex shared the honors of the victory that clinched the pennant in Boston on September 29.

In the ensuing world series with the Boston Red Sox, Alexander bested Ernie Shore, 3-1, in the first game, played in Philadelphia; the only game the Phillies were to win. The Red Sox won the next three by identical scores of 2-1, then made it four in a row and the series by winning the fifth game, 5-4.

During the next two pennant races, the Phillies finished second, dropped then to sixth and were off on the long, lean years of adversity. Yet even these failed to halt the procession of great players to uphold the old tradition.

As the seasons came and went they brought with them black-haired, smiling Jimmy Wilson, later to manage the team for a period; Cy Williams, Dick Bartell, Chuck Klein, mightiest home run hitter of the club's history. They brought also Pinky Whitney, Curt Davis, Spud Davis, Lefty O'Doul, Hal Carlson, Peck Lorian, Fidgety Phil Collins, Bucky Walters, Hugh Mulcahy, Dolph Camilli, Claude Passeau. And so on down to the Whiz Kids.

But if the years continued showering the Phillies with gifted players, they did not deal so well with the once pretentious field that became known as Baker Bowl. The structure grew gaunt and weather-beaten, standing like some ancient relic leaning against storm and vicissitude.

After 51 years, the Phillies bid good-bye to the park following a game with Giants on June 30, 1938 and played their first game as permanent residents of Shibe Park on July 4, 1938. An old era had passed, a new one was starting. The Phillies were just five years away from Bob Carpenter's regime and bright design for living.

Coming into possession late in 1943, the youthful new owner was shortly to go into the Army and miss the entirety of the 1944 and 1945 seasons. However, thanks to the building program mapped out by the late R. R. M.

Carpenter, Sr., and the late Herbert J. Pennock, the then 28-year-old president laid the groundwork for the pennant winning team to come.

For the first time in the history of the organization, a farm system came into being that was more than one in name only. Also for the first time in its hitherto checked finances, it had lavish resources that were to be spent with a free hand unknown to previous owners.

By 1946 the Phillies had risen to fifth place in the standings, their highest in 14 seasons. In 1949, in a stirring late season onslaught, they rode into first division in a third-place finish. Once again, a team wearing the uniform of the Philadelphia Nationals was on the threshold of the pennant.

Too, quite in keeping, it had become studded with players of the same stature who had preceded them through all the years gone by. They were young players whose names have become household words—such as Curt Simmons, Del Ennis, Robin Roberts, Puddin'head Jones, Granville Hamner, Richie Ashburn, Eddie Waitkus, Bill Nicholson, Bubba Church, Jim Konstanty, the newly added Howie Fox and Connie Ryan.

So this rather brief, unelaborate rollcall ends with the naming of these and of Eddie Sawyer, a manager cut in the broad pattern of the game's outstanding managers, a field leader who in but his second full season was to guide his team to the championship.

The figure of Eddie Sawyer is one more to add to the brave band of Phillies—champions all.

THE PITCH- OMETER

Once again the Phillies are co-sponsoring with the Blue Cross this year a search for the swiftest thrower in the ranks of Philadelphia's amateur ball players. Before the finals are reached in Shibe Park and the fireball winner is revealed, hundreds of youngsters between the eligible ages of 16 and 19 will have enjoyed the throwing test provided by a scientific measuring device, the Pitchometer.

Major league ball players are yearly surprised by the throwing speed of some of these hitherto unknown, unheralded lads; who may not necessarily be pitchers but players from any other position. Thus the winner in the finals in 1951 loosed a pitch that was timed traveling at a speed of 82.0 miles per hour. In 1950 the winner's throw was clocked at 88.8 mph; in 1949 at 85.2.

Following the usual procedure, the Pitchometer visits the various neighborhood recreation centers and playgrounds. The winners of these sectional trials meet in the finals, the victor in this event being given the annual Eddie Sawyer Award of a $250 government bond.

Built by the world-famed Franklin Institute under the direction of Dr. I. M. Levitt, the Pitchometer uses the principle of the photoelectric cell, commonly known as the "electric eye." The heart of the apparatus consists of two velocity screens exactly one foot apart.

At the top of each screen is a lumiline lamp which sprays a thin sheet of light downward upon an opening, behind which is the aforementioned cell. The passage of the ball past the first screen causes a slight falling off in the amount of light striking the ball.

This registers on an electronic timer. Continuation of the ball past the second screen again operates the timer, this time to stop it. As the timer is calibrated in miles-per-hour for a one-foot base line, the answer given by the timer is the speed of the throw.

The Phillies, Associated Hospital Service of Philadelphia and Franklin Institute present the Pitchometer to the youths of the Philadelphia metropolitan area in the interests of good sportsmanship, good health and the expanding realm of science.

Robin Roberts tries out his pitching speed. Player looking on is Russ Meyer.

BLOCK TICKETS

For the greater convenience of the industrial firms, business houses, service clubs and the like seeking to attend games in a body, the Phillies have established a bloc seat bureau. Introduced by Bob Carpenter as a public service, the new department is represented by two young livewires by name of Hugh Dougherty and Tom Hudson.

Covering in person a radius within a hundred miles and more of Philadelphia, Dougherty and Hudson are prepared to handle every last detail for any organization desiring to hold "a day" at a Phillies home game.

This departure, new in major league baseball, resulted from the ever increasing problem the office staff previously encountered in trying to cater to such demands and at the same time perform its regular duties. Therefore, to end this, all bloc seat requests are now handled by specialists.

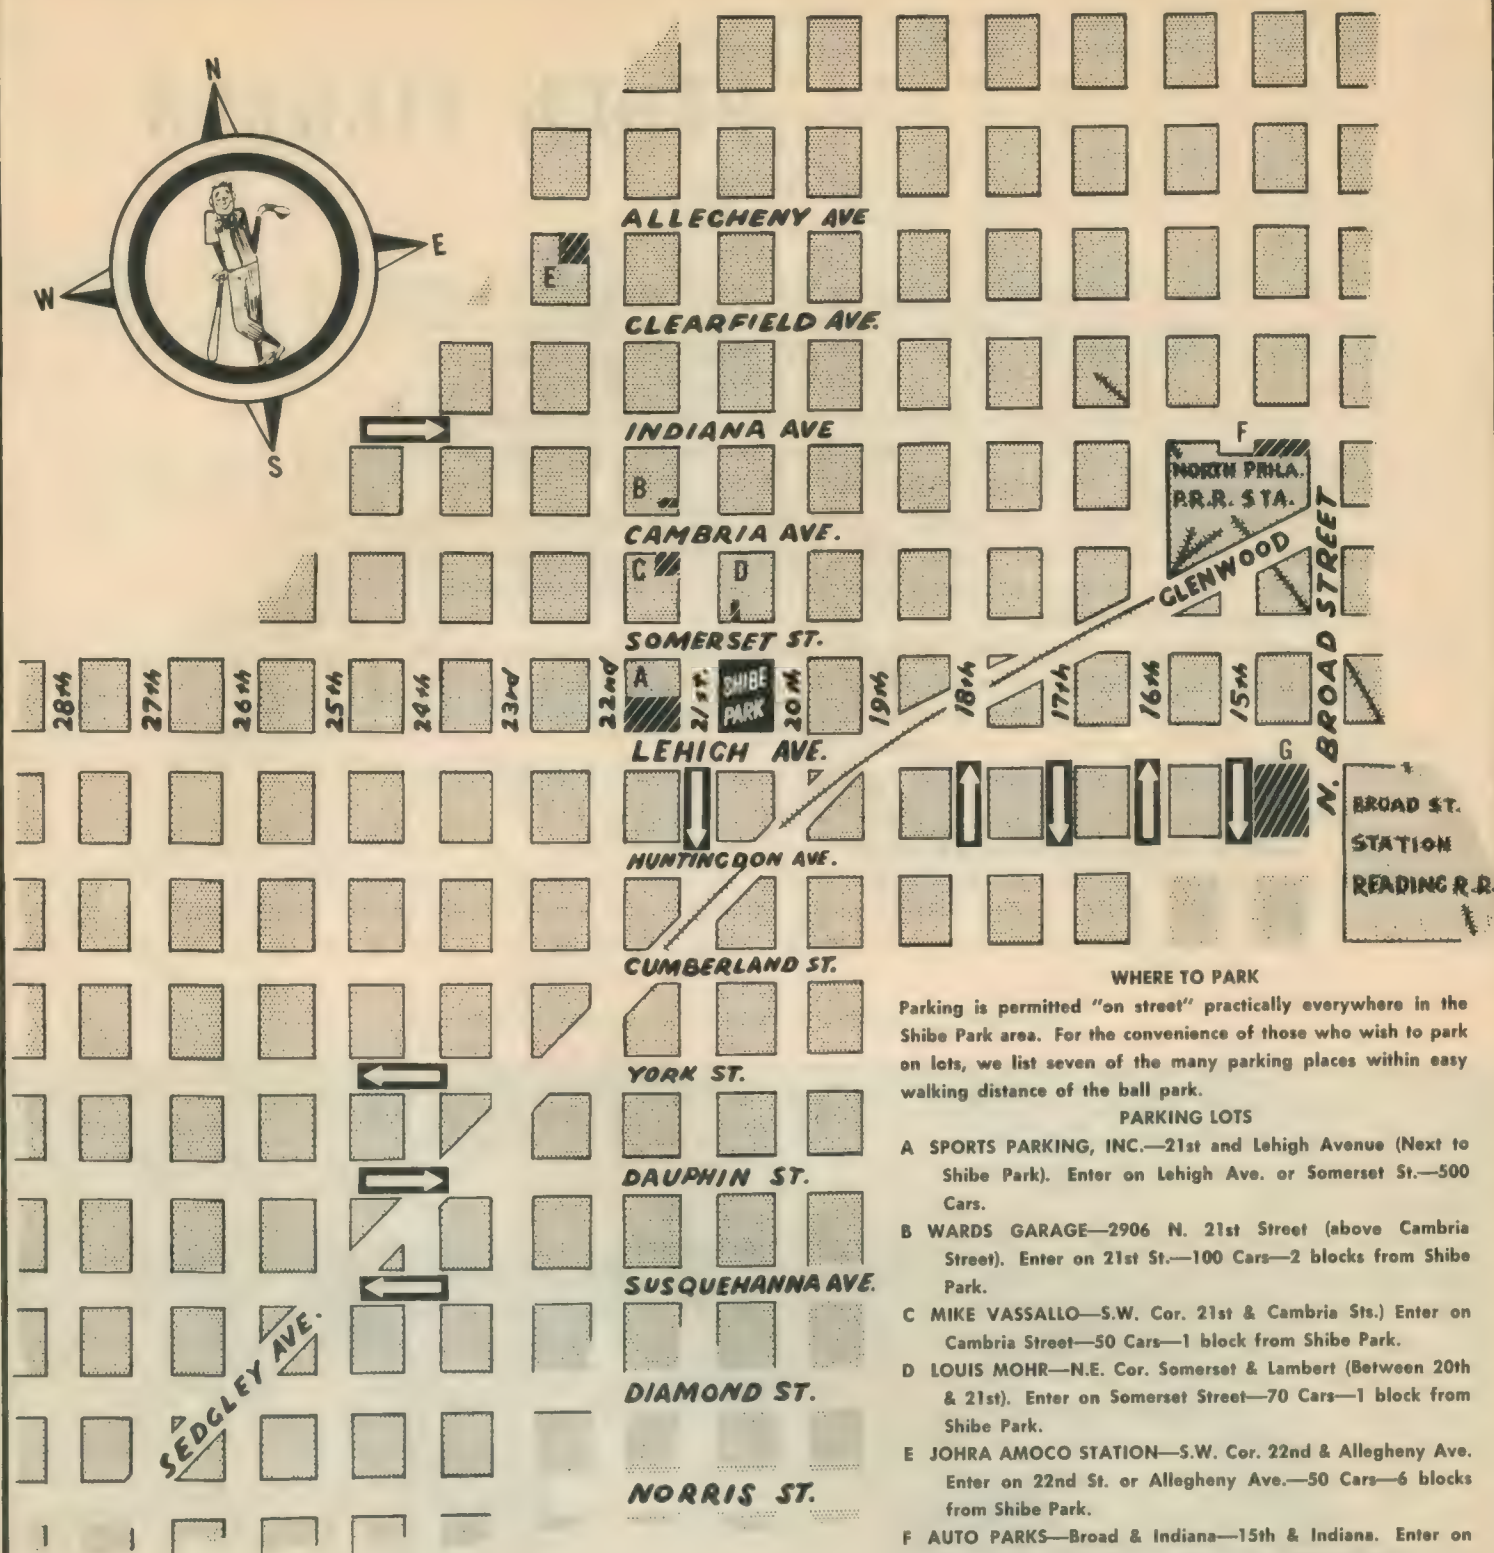

Under this set-up, Hudson and Dougherty confer with principals interested in group attendance. They present seating plans, provide the tickets, arrange transportation by bus or rail and look after the wants of the party at the ball park on the day of the game.

Groups interested in this tailor-made, convenient way to attend a Phillies game can reach Hudson and Dougherty by phone (BALDWIN 9-9200) or by mail at the club's mid-town offices, 1906 Packard Building.
